Transformation and multilingualism key to advertising industry growth and success

The Pendoring Awards have been on an incredible journey of transformation over the last few years. The awards has solidified its place as a South African nation-building project that aims to bring diverse people together through the celebration of creativity in all indigenous languages.

The endorsement received this year from UNESCO and the South African Commission for UNESCO goes a long way in positioning The Pendoring as a developmental language platform that aims to celebrate creativity in all of South Africa's local languages.

Social media has been abuzz with positive feedback about the Pendorring Awards ceremony. The show featured hosts Hulisani Ravele and Schalk Bezuidenhout, speaking in their native languages throughout the show, while an on-stage electronic subtitle bar provided translations for all members of the audience. Resident Pendorring band, Bombshelter Beast, rendered a moving acoustic piece in the Khoekhoegowab/Nama language during the event. "Pendorring felt like a space for all South Africans. A truly African experience... it was one of the few times I felt I belonged in this industry," said Melusi Tshabala of Everyday Zulu on Facebook.

Though the industry still has a long way to go in terms of transformation, Pendorring 2019 marked an exciting milestone for creatives who embrace change and spearhead transformation in advertising.
